There are what I hope are numerous typos, if not someone does not know how to spell a lot of words. The grammatical errors are fewer but still a bit distracting. This is a short story and should have gotten my attention immediately but sadly did not. There is no real tension or feeling of menace, the characters are generic and do not elicit any feelings one way or the other.For a diversion or something to do this can suffice but other than that I can't say much for it.A platoon of soldiers goes into a Vietnam village because a biological weapon has been detonated above it. They are sent in to police the bodies and get first hand information on what the weapon does. It does a lot more than they would have ever expected.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Reads like it was written by a teenBy Lori ScritchfieldThe plot started out good but fizzled quickly.There is nothing realistic about the characters...a specially trained Army unit enters the jungle and they are freaked out by a pool of blood and a bloody footprint. I'm not buying it. This same team of men flees while zombies tear one of them apart. Apparently, these soldiers never learned to shoot. The entire story has a middle school English assignment feel.0 of 0 people found the following review helpful. Poor ProofingBy MMThis story had a decent plot, but it was presented in a childlike manner. Whoever did the proofreading did a very poor job.....could have been a much more engaging story.....

A group of American soldiers in Vietnam are assigned to clean out a village that has been wiped out by a top secret weapon...a chemical that has been sprayed down on the village to asphyxiate all of the inhabitants. When they arrive for the clean up job, they discover that they inhabitants have become zombies.
